BATTLE OF TUESDAY.

(From the Boston Journal, May 12.)
WASHINGTON, May 11, P. M.

One of the greatest fought battles of the war was fought yesterday near Spotsylvania Court House. I left the field at 6:30 this morning, and am able to give a statement of what took place. One week ago today the army moved from Culpeper. It has had six days of continued fighting, in which there have been three great battles.

On Saturday morning Lee retired from the Wilderness, leaving but a small force to keep up appearances. Grant immediately ordered an advance to Spotsylvania. The 5th corps taking the lead, confronted Longstreet three miles west of the town early on Sunday morning, skirmishing all day, ending in a hard fought engagement. Sunday night the rebels pushed back a short distance. The sixth corps arrived near the close of the battle and participated. The second corps arrived in the evening. The ninth corps marched by a longer road, did not arrive till Monday morning.

The battle-field is a series of ridges mostly covered with woods and fine thickets, in which the rebels lay concealed with batteries masked. Standing in the center of our line, between the 5th and 6th corps, on Piney Grove road, looking toward the Court House, you see a gentle slope with a series of undulations, marked with rifle-pits and batteries, which defend all approaches. To gain them there must be hard fighting at every step. The thickets are not quite so dense in the Wilderness, but most of the ground is covered by a forest. Gen. Robinson, commanding the second division of the 6th corps, was wounded in this engagement.

Skirmishing commenced again on Monday morning, and by reports of prisoners it was ascertained that Ewell was also in front. Lee had pushed his troops rapidly into a strong position on the south bank of the Po. The court house is on elevated land, and the village is a collection of half a dozen houses. Three roads radiate—one northwest to Todd's Tavern, one due north of Piney Grove Church, and one northeast to Ewell'sburg. The 2d and 5th corps covered the way to Todd's, and the 6th on the road to Piney Branch, and the 6th the road to Fredericksburg. The Catherine road leading westward was used by Lee to search the position.

A. P. Hill reached the battle-field on Monday night, and took his position on the rebel right, confronting Burnside. Ewell had the center against Sedgwick. Longstreet stood against Hancock. The lines were in the form of a horse shoe. It was Gettyburg reversed—Lee having the inner half circle.

Skirmishing commenced on Monday morning and continued through the forenoon. Sedgwick, while planting a battery, was picked off by a rebel sharp-shooter at a half a mile distance. His death cast a gloom over the whole army, but did not diminish the ardor of our men. They burned for revenge. Gen. Wright was placed in command.

In the afternoon Hancock crossed to Creek Branch of the Po River, turning the flank of Longstreet, and pushed him toward the town, and held his ground (Longstreet's) skirmishing commenced at sunrise and continued through the forenoon along the whole line with increasing intensity. The pickets on both sides gradually approached nearer, shortening the distance between the two armies.

Gen. Grant spent all the forenoon examining the positions, and was frequently on the line with the pickets. He issued orders for a general attack at 5 o'clock, but the rebels grew uneasy—took the matter into their own hands, and moved in heavy columns against Hancock's left and Warren's right. The 1st division, 2d corps, (Barlow's) was fought back to the north side of the Creek to a strong position. The rebels were elated and attempted to cross the creek and were repulsed.

Up to this hour there had been but little artillery used by either party, but battery after battery was brought into position, and the wild general uproar at last began. At 1 o'clock the rebel infantry surged against Hancock, and then against Warren, but were immediately rolled back. Gibbon, commanding the 2d division of the 2d corps, was withdrawn from Todd's Tavern road and sent to Warren's aid.

At 3:30 the rebels made a terrific charge against our right center. Their hurrah was the war whoop of the Indians, but it did not intimidate the brave men of the 2d and 5th corps.

I never heard a heavier fire than that which burst from Barlow's, Cutler's, Gibbon's and Barlow's divisions. The rebel columns pelted away, and after one of the most desperate fights of all time, were forced back under the tremendous fire and unflinching bravery of the divisions already named. Parts of other divisions were engaged, but not to such an extent as these.

It was Hancock's turn. His troops advanced with cheers, Barlow's division fell upon Meade's division of Longstreet's corps like a thunderbolt, cutting it all to pieces. Rebel prisoners say it was the greatest charge of the war. The rebels were literally piled in heaps. The advance of other parts of the line not having been made at the appointed moment, the advantages gained were lost, and the 2d returned to its former position. There was no further attempt on the part of the rebels to push the 2d corps.

Just before sunset Wright and Burnside attacked the enemy with great fury. Wright carried their rifle pits. The 2d Vermont held on against all the efforts of the rebels to retake it. They said they would hold it for six months if given them plenty of ammunition and rations.

Gen. Wright, at 9 o'clock, went to headquarters asking for instructions whether they should hold it. "Pile in the men and hold it at all hazards," was Grant's reply. His laurels can never fade!

Burnside pushed the enemy back almost to the Court House, and held his ground when I left the field this morning. The colored troops were not in the charge. Upton's brigade of the 6th corps captured Dale's brigade of Ewell's corps, but in the melee were able to bring off only twelve hundred.

Three guns were taken and lost again. Thirty-seven officers and a large number of battle-lags were taken.

McCartney's 1st Massachusetts battery is highly praised for its great execution on the enemy.

Gen. Rice was wounded and his leg amputated, but he died in the afternoon. Just before he died he desired to be turned over. "Which way?" The chaplain asked. "Turn my face toward the enemy," was his last words.

Captain B. F. Davis, of the 12th Mass., captured the flags, and was mortally wounded and died last night. Up to ten o'clock to-day there was constant skirmishing, indicating that he was going to attack Gen. Grant was ready. The troops are in excellent spirits. They have fought six days and gained all the time. Lee will fight and with desperation. There will be more great battles, but officers and men alike feel sure that it is the last struggle. They have perfect confidence in Grant and admire Meade as an executive officer.

We have lost twelve Generals. Sedgwick, Wadsworth, Stevenson, Hays, and Rice killed; Bartlett, Getty, Robinson, Morris and Baxter wounded; Seymour and Shaler missing. Our losses of men are very heavy.

Rebel prisoners report that they have been on half rations, and that rebel officers told them that their next rations must come from Grant's stores. None had been issued except to prisoners up to 10 o'clock this a. m. On the contrary, thirty of Lee's wagons fell into our hands last night.

We have about 4,000 prisoners.

An incident will show the enthusiasm of our troops. A soldier with his arm amputated, said: "I am sorry I have lost my arm, for I want to be at them again." He sang "Rally round the flag, boys," and a score in the hospital joined in the chorus.

To sum up: the rebels tried to stop Grant at the Wilderness, but, after fighting two battles, retreated. Lee has tried to stop Grant at Spotsylvania, and has had both flanks folded back—his entire line of rifle-pits carried—and has been repulsed in all his attacks.

I think it is Gen. Grant's intention to go to Richmond at all hazards, and I have great confidence that he will succeed.

The Great Battle on Thursday—How it was won.

(From the Cincinnati Gazette, May 14.)

WASHINGTON, May 13.

The general summing up of yesterday's brilliant success, the dispatches from Ingalls, Grant, Hancock and others announcing it; the statements of prisoners, the guns and colors we have captured, and the inspiring news from Butler and Sigel that completed the circle of our triumphs and made this the happiest day of Washington has known for many a month—all this may be left to the Associated Press to tell. Meanwhile the following, just received at the bureau from correspondents on the battle-field, possess a special interest:

The battle of Thursday was the most decided success which the Army of the Potomac has yet attained, as well as the most desperate struggle of the eight days' fighting.

Early in the morning Hancock made the most brilliant charge on the enemy's right, sweeping their two lines of breastworks, capturing 10 pieces of artillery and 6,000 prisoners. Following this a general attack began and continued furiously for some four hours, when there was a lull up to a late hour of the night. Wednesday night passed in quiet. The battle of the two preceding days had served to show that the enemy's line in front of Spotsylvania Court House was so fortified that to attempt to carry it by assault would have been madness, but one point in it had been found where the works did not seem to defy our attempt at charging upon them, and by a singular coincidence there was a point in the line where there was a gap in our own lines, between Wright's (late Sedgwick's) corps and that of Burnside. Here the enemy's policy had been to mass his forces and attack us in overwhelming numbers. It was resolved, in part at least, to give him a taste of our own tactics. Shortly before midnight Wednesday night, Hancock began moving. During the day he had held the extreme right. By hard marching he passed in the utmost silence along almost the entire length of our lines, and reached the point between Wright and Burnside, where our lines were so thin.

Meanwhile the enemy remembering that they had suffered none from any fire at this point, were giving it no attention, and had no expectation of any attack in this quarter. Their reconnaissance had found Hancock on our right, and from Burnside they expected to meet the brunt of the morning's assault. The morning broke slow and dim; a heavy mist overhung the field and concealed our movements. The enemy were still waiting for the attack on our right, when to their utter and complete surprise, a hell-fire burst out from this unexpected point, where yesterday they had found no opposition, and in an instant Hancock's whole corps was charged with triumphant cheers and in magnificent style over their outer row of breastworks. Though stunned by the sudden and unexpected onset, they were still true to their oft proved bravery. Rallying on the instant, they made the best defense they could, and desperately contested our further advance. It was splendid but it was vain. Their lines melted away before our irresistible charge; broke into eddying fragments, and were swept back in the first tide of the attack. The outer line of the breastworks had been carried by the first rush. This brief light ended in our sweeping over the second and lapping our flanks around the bravest of its defenders.

Five thousand prisoners, a whole division—with its commander, Maj. Gen. Johnson, at its head; forty pieces of artillery, battle flags without number. Such were the splendid trophies with which Gen. Hancock thus began the day. Among the officers captured besides the Major General commanding the division, was his brother, another Gen. Johnson, and Gen. G. H. Stuart, formerly of Baltimore, both commanding brigades.

Our brilliant success aroused the highest enthusiasm in the army, and the men seemed as eager for the battle as they did the first day in the Wilderness. Hancock's gallant stroke was made just at the right time and place, for at every other point the enemy's works were very strong and well guarded. To have made this attack in front would have been most disastrous.

The news from Sheridan's cavalry expedition is of the most satisfactory nature. He has torn up ten miles of the Orange and Gordonsville Railroad, the enemy's principal avenue of supplies for Lee's army. He recaptured 500 prisoners on their way to Richmond, and took four pieces of artillery. After Hancock captured Johnson and his division, a highly interesting interview took place, when Johnson was brought to headquarters. Meade and Johnson had been chums in the army other days, and they readily recognized each other. Johnson was introduced to Grant, and a friendly chat ensued, in which the fact was mentioned that Grant and he once occupied positions in the same brigade. It was ascertained to certainty from prisoners that Gen. Wadsworth is dead and buried inside the rebel lines, and Seymour and Shaler prisoners at headquarters. They pronounced Longstreet badly but not mortally wounded.

Johnson was known to nearly all Meade's staff officers, and there were many recognitions and anxious inquiries. General Hunt, chief of artillery, greeted him with "Ed, I am glad to see you," to which Johnson, half teasingly and half seriously, replied: "Well, Hunt, under the circumstances, I am not glad to see you; you are dead to the matter very philosophically." He answered us we would have a hard time of it yet, although he admitted that we had dealt them a heavy blow. His dress is the faded, dilapidated suit that rebel Generals wear; his sword suit that much the worse for wear, and in no part of his dress was there anything like style. He put on no airs whatever, unlike the cockney Stuart, who, when Gen. Hancock, his gallant captor, offered his hand, refused, saying his feelings would not allow him to shake hands.

By eight o'clock a terrible rain and hail storm began to mingle with the crash, and a storm of artillery and musketry that was sweeping over Spotsylvania, the fighting being now mostly in open ground, which gave the artillery fair play. The heaviest fire was now coming from Warren's corps, which held our center. There was no advancing, however, and seemingly little was gained on either side. The rebel artillery played furiously for a while on Grant's and Meade's headquarters. After its firing had subsided the desperate nature of the fight was the more apparent. Everywhere were the wounded, dead and dying. The last four or five hours had done fierce work, as scorched trees and many dead bodies of men and horses plainly told. The guns taken by Hancock are all twelve-pounders.

INSURE WITH THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF WISCONSIN—IT IS THE BEST COMPANY FOR WESTERN MEN!—The reasons why this is the best Company, are: That it is a Western Company, made up of and managed by Western men, doing all or nearly all its business in the Northwest, and concentrating in this one Company a superior class of risks, mostly of young men, or men in the prime of life, and they selected with its great care in regard to eligibility to Life Insurance, are as the risks of any other company.

It is true that the Company has neither the age nor the accumulations of some eastern companies, but is gaining the latter very fast; it is vigorous for one of its age; it is doing a large business, having issued 637 policies in the months of December and January just passed, and is doing its business as economically as the same can be done anywhere. It has for its guide, the experience of all older companies, and among its managers some of the best business men in the northwest.

This is the first successful effort ever made to build up a similar institution in the West, and it should be the pride, as it certainly is the interest, of every business man in this section of the State, to identify himself with its growth.

This Company issues non-forfeiting policies, upon which premiums are paid in five or ten annual payments. These non-forfeiting policies are very desirable, as they guarantee to the policy holder the benefit of all the money that he pays into the Company, and also enable him to pay his premiums for the whole of life while he is young, or at an early period, thus relieving him from the burden of payment in old age. Insurance upon this plan, (as well as on all other policies that this Company issues) become due and payable at death, should death occur before the ten years expire.

It also issues the endowment policy which becomes due and payable to the party assured at a stated age specified. These latter policies are becoming quite popular, and are particularly desirable for young men.

BATTLE OF TUESDAY.

Gen. Wright, at 9 o'clock, went to headquarters and reported their gallantry, asking for instructions whether they should hold it. "Pile in the men and hold it at all hazards," was Grant's reply.

Gen. Wright went back to execute the order, but found that a subordinate officer had ordered them back for fear that they would be cut off. Glorious sons of a glorious State! Their honor is naturalized. Their laurels can never fade!

Burnside pushed the enemy back almost to the Court House, and held his ground when I left the field this morning. The colored troops were not in the charge. Upson's brigade of the 6th corps captured Dutton's brigade of Ewell's corps, but the rebels were able to bring off only twelve hundred.

Three guns were taken and lost again. Thirty-seven officers and a large number of battle-fans were taken.

McCauley's 1st Massachusetts battery is highly praised for its great execution on the enemy.

Gen. Rice was wounded and his leg amputated, but he died in the afternoon. Just before he died he desired to be turned over. "Which way?" The chaplain asked. "Turn my face toward the enemy," was his last words.

We have lost twelve Generals. Sedgwick, Wadsworth, Stevenson, Hays, and Rice killed; Bartlett, Getty, Robinson, Morris and Baxter wounded; Seymour and Shaler missing. Our losses of men are very heavy.

Rebel prisoners report that they have been on half rations, and that rebel officers told them that their next rations must come from Grant's stores. None had been issued except to prisoners up to 10 o'clock this a. m. On the contrary, thirty of Lee's wagons full into our hands last night.

We have about 4,000 prisoners. An incident will show the enthusiasm of our troops. A soldier with his arm amputated, said: "I am sorry I have lost my arm, for I want to be at them again." He sang "Rally round the flag, boys," and a score in the hospital joined in the chorus.

To sum up, the rebels tried to stop Grant at the Wilderness, but, after fighting two battles, retreated. Lee has tried to stop Grant at Spotsylvania, and has had both flanks folded back—his outer line of rifle-pits carried—and has been repulsed in all his attacks.

I think it is Gen. Grant's intention to go to Richmond at all hazards, and I have great confidence that he will succeed.

The Great Battle on Thursday—How it was Won.

(From the Cincinnati Gazette, May 14.)

WASHINGTON, May 13. The general summing up of yesterday's brilliant success, the dispatches from Ingalls, Grant, Hancock and others announcing it, the statements of prisoners, the guns and colors we have captured, and the inspiring news from Butler and Sigel that completed the circle of our triumphs and made this the happiest day Washington has known for many a month—all this may be left to the Associated Press to tell. Meanwhile the following, just received at the bureau from correspondents on the battle-field, possess a special interest.

The battle of Thursday was the most decided success which the Army of the Potomac has yet attained, as well as the most desperate struggle of the eight days' fighting.

Early in the morning Hancock made a most brilliant charge on the enemy's right, sweeping their two lines of breastworks, capturing 40 pieces of artillery and 6,000 men. Following this a general attack began and continued furiously for some four hours, when there was a lull up to a late hour of the night. Wednesday night passed in quiet. The battle of the two preceding days had served to show that the enemy's line in front of Spotsylvania Court House was so fortified that to attempt to carry it by assault would have been madness, but one point in it had been found where the works did not seem to defy our attempt at charging upon them, and by a singular coincidence that was a point in the line where there was a gap in our own lines, between Wright's (late Sedgwick's) corps and that of Burnside. Hitherto the enemy's policy had been to mass his forces and attack us in overwhelming numbers. It was resolved, in part at least, to give him a taste of his own tactics. Shortly before midnight, Wednesday night, Hancock began moving. During the day he had held the extreme right. By hard marching he passed in the utmost silence along almost the entire length of our lines, and reached the point between Wright and Burnside, where our lines were so thin.

Meanwhile the enemy remembering that he had suffered none from any fire at this point, were giving it no attention, and had no expectation of any attack in this quarter. Their reconnaissance had found Hancock on our right, and from Burnside they expected to meet the brunt of the morning's assault. The morning broke slow and dim; a heavy mist overhung the field and concealed our movements. The enemy were still waiting for the attack on our right, when to their utter and complete surprise, a hell-fire burst out from this unexpected point, where yesterday they had found no opposition, and in an instant Hancock's whole corps was charged with triumphant cheers and in magnificent style over their outer row of breastworks. Though stunned by the sudden and unexpected onset, they were still true to their oft-proved bravery. Rallying on the instant, they made the best defense they could, and desperately contested our further advance. It was splendid but it was in vain. Their lines melted away before our resistless charge, broke into eddying fragments, and were swept back in the first tide of the attack. The outer line of the breastworks had been carried by the first rush. This brief fight ended in our sweeping over the second and lapping our flanks around the bravest of its defenders.

Five thousand prisoners, a whole division—with its commander, Maj. Gen. Johnson, at its head; forty pieces of artillery, battle flags without number. Such were the splendid trophies with which Gen. Hancock thus began the day. Among the officers captured besides the Major General commanding the division, was his brother, another Gen. Johnson, and Gen. G. H. Stuart, formerly of Baltimore, both commanding brigades.

Our brilliant success aroused the highest enthusiasm in the army, and the men seemed as eager for the battle as they did the first day in the Wilderness. Hancock's gallant stroke was made just at the right time and place for at every other point the enemy's works were very strong and well guarded. To have made this attack in front would have been most disastrous.

The news from Sheridan's cavalry expedition is of the most satisfactory nature. He has torn up ten miles of the Orange and Gordonsville Railroad, the enemy's principal avenue of supplies for Lee's army. He recaptured 500 prisoners on their way to Richmond, and took four pieces of artillery. After Hancock captured Johnson and his division, a highly interesting interview took place, when Johnson was brought to headquarters. Meade and Johnson had been chums in the army in other days, and they readily recognized each other. Johnson was introduced to Grant, and a friendly chat ensued, in which the fact was mentioned that Grant and he once occupied positions in the same brigade. It was ascertained to a certainty from prisoners that Gen. Wadsworth is dead and buried inside the rebel lines, and Seymour and Shaler prisoners at headquarters. They pronounced Longstreet badly but not mortally wounded.

Johnson was known to nearly all Meade's staff officers and there were many recognitions and anxious inquiries. General Hunt, chief of artillery, greeted him with "Ed, I am glad to see you," to which Johnson, half teasingly and half seriously, replied: "Well, Hunt, under the circumstances, I am not glad to see you; you look at the matter very philosophical; he assured us we would have a hard time of it yet, although he admitted that we had dealt them a heavy blow. His dress is the faded, dilapidated suit that rebel Generals wear; his slouch hat was much the worse for wear, and in no part of his dress was there anything like style. He put on no airs whatever, unlike the cockney Stuart, who, when Gen. Hancock, his gallant captor, offered his hand, refused, saying his feelings would not allow him to shake hands. By eight o'clock a terrible rain and hail storm began to mingle with the crash, and a storm of artillery and musketry that was sweeping over Spotsylvania, the fighting being now mostly in open ground, which gave the artillery fair play. The heaviest fire was now coming from Warren's corps, which held our center. There was no advancing, however, and seemingly little was gained on either side. The rebel artillery played furiously for a while on Grant's and Meade's headquarters. After his firing had subsided the desperate nature of the fight was the more apparent. Everywhere were the wounded, dead and dying. The last four or five hours had done more work, as secured trees and many dead bodies of men and horses plainly told. The guns taken by Hancock are all twelve-pounders.

INSURE WITH THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF WISCONSIN—IT IS THE BEST COMPANY FOR WESTERN MEN!—The reasons why this is the best Company, are: That it is a Western Company, made up of and managed by Western men, doing all or nearly all its business in the Northwest, and concentrating in this one Company a superior class of risks, mostly of young men, or men in the prime of life, and they selected with as great care in regard to eligibility to Life Insurance, as are the risks of any other company.

It is true that the Company has neither the age nor the accumulations of some eastern companies, but is gaining the latter very fast; is vigorous for one of its age; is doing a large business, having issued 637 policies in the months of December and January just passed, and is doing its business as economically as the same can be done anywhere. It has for its guide, the experience of all older companies, and among its managers some of the best business men in the northwest.

This is the first successful effort ever made to build up a similar institution in the West, and it should be the pride, as it certainly is the interest, of every business man in this section of the State, to identify himself with its growth.

This Company issues non-forfeiting policies, upon which premiums are paid in five or ten annual payments. These non-forfeiting policies are very desirable, as they guarantee to the policy holder the benefit of all the money that he pays into the Company, and also enable him to pay his premiums for the whole of life while he is young, or at an early period, thus relieving him from the burden of payment in old age. Insurance upon this plan, (as well as on all other policies that this Company issues) become due and payable at death, should death occur before the ten years expire.

It also issues the endowment policy which becomes due and payable to the party assured at a stated age specified. These latter policies are becoming quite popular, and are particularly desirable for young men.

Gen. A. J. Smith's Strategy.—The brilliant and successful strategy of General Smith at the close of the second day's fighting near Pleasant Hill La., deserves a distinguished notice. The day was a day of disaster, when suddenly in the midst of retreat, a favorable point and a happy thought struck the mind of Gen. Smith, an educated soldier, and he availed himself of it. He placed a division in front in line of battle, and arranging his artillery and the residue of his forces along the ridges in the valley between which the road ran, he awaited the approach of the Confederates.

On they came yelling and foaming as before, and with rebounding speed they rushed upon the troops they saw before them. They apparently alarmed at their overwhelming force, retreated, first in order and then at a trot, and the enemy followed. When the gorge was completely filled, grape, canister and musket-shot opened upon them, and the destruction was appalling: those who could fell back to their main body, the few that passed through were taken prisoner, and the federal troops re-formed, the forces under Smith continuing to cover their retreat until all safely reached Grand Ecore.

REPORTED FOR THE JOURNAL BY JAMES H. DUFFY, JR., CHIEF AND PRINCIPAL DEALER.

JANUARY, May 18, 1894.
The grain market presented a lively appearance, receipts being the largest of any day since the opening of the spring trade. Wheat was in good demand, and we note an advance of 12c in price, with sales of about 2,000 bushels at $1.12 1/2 for choice, and 1,000 at $1.10 for medium grades, and 500 at $1.08 for low grades. Corn was in good demand, and prices advanced 2c, higher, selling at $1.02 1/2 per bushel. Oats were in light demand, and prices advanced 1c, selling at $1.00 1/2 per bushel. Potatoes were in light demand, and prices advanced 1c, selling at $1.00 1/2 per bushel. Beans were in light demand, and prices advanced 1c, selling at $1.00 1/2 per bushel. Chickens were in light demand, and prices advanced 1c, selling at $1.00 1/2 per bushel.

WHEAT—Extra milling grade at $1.12 1/2; common to good shipping grade at $1.08 1/2 to $1.10. OATS—Active at $1.02 1/2 for No. 1, and $1.00 1/2 for No. 2. RYE—In good demand at $1.00 1/2 for No. 1, and $1.00 for No. 2. BARLEY—Fine samples at $1.00 1/2; common to fair at $1.00. TIMOTHY HAY—Good to choice at $1.00 1/2 to $1.05. DRESSED HOGS—Range of $1.00 1/2 to $1.05 for light to heavy.

PRICES CURRENT OF GROCERIES.
CORN—Yellow, 100 bushels, $1.02 1/2. WHEAT—No. 1, 100 bushels, $1.12 1/2. OATS—No. 1, 100 bushels, $1.02 1/2. RYE—No. 1, 100 bushels, $1.00 1/2. BARLEY—No. 1, 100 bushels, $1.00 1/2. POTATOES—No. 1, 100 bushels, $1.00 1/2. BEANS—No. 1, 100 bushels, $1.00 1/2. CHICKENS—No. 1, 100 bushels, $1.00 1/2.
